

THE LAND QUESTION.

To discuss the land question from a scriptural stand point as the Enterprise is doing can only result in an indeterminate argument. The journal above alluded to quotes the purchase of a cave by Abraham of Mackpelah for a burial vault for 400 shekels which was nearly $300. This will strike the reader as a huge price for a burial spot in a country where he had been for years roving about and appropriating land wherever he saw fit. In Genesis XX it tells how he took possession of the land between Kadesh and Shur in Gerar without paying anything for it. He was over a hundred years old when he purchased the cave of Mackpelah and at such exorbitant figures that it is clear that the original owner of the cave took advantage of his lack of knowledge of the ways and the country and got largely the best of him. When he first spoke of wanting the cave they were willing to give it to him for nothing and said: "None of us shall withhold from thee his sepulchre but that thou mayest bury thy dead." The children of Heth seemed willing to accord to Abraham the freedom of the country and open handed hospitalities of their sepulchres. When, however, he seemed anxious to pay money for the same they named a good stiff sum and he counted out the shekels at once. Prior to the time Abraham had been acting very strangely. Thinking that he had an order from heaven to sacrifice his son Isaac he bound him with cords to an altar and was about to kill him with a knife when the work of death was intercepted by an angel. He also drove Hager and her young son Ishmael into the wilderness to starve. Ishmael was his own offspring. He purchased the cave on the occasion of the death of his wife and this extravagance coupled with his previous acts lead to the unmistakable conclusion that his mind was wandering. Four hundred shekels was a large sum in those days where very little circulating medium was required and its purchasing power for the necessities of life equal to many thousands of dollars of our money. It is on this incident that the Enterprise founds its theory of land monopoly, etc. If one looks in scripture for precedents it is not hard to find almost anything wanted. The children of Israel thought nothing of driving settlers off their lands, killing all who resisted and appropriating the property just as the Southern Pacific Railroad did at Mussel Slough within the present year. In Deuteronomy XIV, 21st, the Israelites are commanded not to eat of anything that dies of disease, but to sell the tainted meat to strangers and aliens. In biblical times the land was free as air to all who would cultivate it, and if to-day a law was passed prohibiting any man from holding large tracts of country which he would neither till or sell it would result in increased prosperity to all classes of people and the country at large. Land monopoly has always been a curse to any country which has allowed it and some of the greatest nations of the earth have met their downfall because the land upon which the support of the inhabitants depended passed from the hands of the many who cultivated it unto the few who allowed it to run to waste.

MRS. LANGTRY'S DOWNFALL.

With an income of about £1,200 she embarked in a social current where the lightest draught craft needs at least £6,000. Society kindly magnified her husband's resources five-fold, and they were soon "in the swim" with the richest. To people in such a circle, getting credit in London is as easy as breathing. No fancy is too extravagant, no price too large; the dealers struggled for the privilege of becoming Mrs. Langtry's creditors. But if the "Jersey Lily" contracted expensive tastes, so did the husband, and between them they rode the gift horse to an early grave. Seriously and skillfully managed the Langtry credit ought to have lasted to a good old age, and they might have died in peace, with debts of not less than £50,000; but it was too much to try to crowd the £50,000 into three or four years. It is said Mrs. Langtry really means to try her fortune upon the stage.—London Truth.

MEDICAL LINGO.

The Chronicle of last night makes the following sensible remarks on the linguistic pomposity of doctors:

One of the disastrous consequences of the shooting of the President is the grave and permanent injury inflicted upon the English language. The learned length of the words and pompous phrases of the doctors, and the verbosity and mangled syntax of the Associated Press, have for two long months filled the press of the country daily. The boys and girls read these dispatches and will insensibly be educated to the use of the language of pretension, ignorance and hypocrisy.

The evil will never be remedied until a law is passed compelling physicians to speak plain English and write their prescriptions in the tongue spoken by the patients who pay them their fees.

It is said that sensible old General Sherman, with his usual forethought, has for some time had soldiers drilling in the movements necessary to remove the President in a hammock from the White House to one of the war vessels. It is to be hoped that ere many days the physicians may find it safe to allow the patient to be removed from the malaria surrounded Capital to where he may breathe the pure, life-giving air of the ocean.

The Dunn family, and their connections, had fat pickings around the City Hall. Better pension the whole tribe than elect John P. for another term.—Post.

Whenever a family gets into politics the successful members are as hard to uproot as the tickle grass about Carson. The more they get of the public pap the more they want and then spread over everything.
